The Rijksmuseum Amsterdam, Paintings Department is seeking a

Junior Curator of 17th-century Dutch paintings (m/f)

The position of Junior Curator enables young art historians specialised in 17th-century Dutch art who pursue a career as a curator to familiarise with curatorial work and the collection of the Rijksmuseum. The junior curator will assist the curator in the care, cataloguing and presentation of the 17th-Century Dutch paintings, the major portion of the museum's collection of paintings. Publications, assisting in the preparation of exhibitions and the installation in the New Rijksmuseum will be among the most important duties of this position.

The junior curator and the curator will be working together with a team of researchers, curators, restorers, and colleagues from the exhibition department and education.

Candidates should have recently graduated in the History of Art, preferably with a thesis on 17th-century Dutch painting.
